THE TRIBUNE.

CRITICAL AND MISCELLANEOUS ESSAYS OF SIR WALTER SCOTT, BART. Collected by himself. (Never before published in America.) In three volumes. Philadelphia: Carey & Hart. New-York: Wiley & Putnam.

CARLYLE, the Corymbus of modern criticism, has labored in one of his strong papers, published in the Edinburgh Review not many months since, to convince himself and the world that the Author of "Waverley," in truth and verity, had no claim or good title to the credit given him by the universal world of being a great man. He writes very profoundly, very pleasingly, and it may be, very convincingly. He made greatness seem much greater than it had ever before appeared, and Sir Walter much smaller than the eyes of ordinary men had been wont to see him. He inverted the telescope—and, sooth to say, the man he gazed at dwindled to a minim, not half as large as his critic; and to the eyes of all who looked, like the samphire-gatherer on Dover Cliff, —he seemed no bigger than his head!

There are some, though, who did not read his essay, and who therefore still labor under the delusion that there was something of genius and of greatness in the Wizard of the North. Those scores of Novels—holding the world in such spell-bound thrall, speaking in all its varied tones the language of Humanity, sketching with more than the painter's art portraits of men and of landscapes, and great pictures of History and of Imagination—those Poems thrown forth with careless haste, and yet glittering with all that is brilliant in fancy and moving in most lively harmonies—all those marvelous works which astonished and delighted the world, and which seemed the seeds of an immortal life, many men believe could not have sprung from mere tact and talent.

The three fine volumes of Critical Essays which we have before us would of themselves have made a reputation for a man of these days: but being known merely as the productions of the leisure hours of Scott, following his novels and his greater works, they are rarely mentioned in connection with his fame. They originally appeared, nearly all of them, in the Edinburgh and Quarterly Reviews—for each of which, at different times, Sir Walter was a constant contributor. They are upon all possible subjects—reviewing History—Poetry—Novels—Biographies—Chronicles—Cookery—Sports—Treatises—Church of Fair—and every thing else that came within his omnivorous reach. They all bear the stamp of the great Author's mind—abounding in anecdote, giving the most graceful and interesting sketches of life and manners, full of wit, clearly the work of an antiquarian, and written with the peculiar ease and elegance which alone would have rendered illustrious their author. We have no room for a notice of these papers separately; but we cannot forbear giving our readers a glimpse of Scott as a reviewer of his own works—while he was first suspected of being the author of Waverley. In the Quarterly Review for January, 1817, was a long Review of the "Tales of My Landlord"—censuring and praising with judicious skill: it is included in this collection. The critic expresses surprise that the author should so long seek to conceal his identity—protests against his carelessness and lack of taste—declares his chief heroes "very amiable and insipid sort of young men"—and yet says kindly that "few can wish his success more sincerely than we do, and yet, without more attention on his own part, we have great doubt of its continuance." He hints that there "is but little originality in the Waverley Novels in point of invention," and proceeds to prove that the author has done little more than "collect and bring out with accuracy and effect incidents and manners which might otherwise have slept in oblivion." He expresses the conviction that all the Waverley Novels and the Tales under review are the production of one mind, and criticizes some of them quite severely, but on the whole, kindly. He presently makes amends for his censure, however, as in the following passage:

"The volume which this author has studied is the great Book of Nature. He has gone abroad into the world in quest of what the world will certainly and abundantly supply, but what a man of great discrimination alone will find, and a man of great discrimination alone will depict after the very highest genius will alone depict after he has discovered it. The characters are not more exclusively human, not more perfectly men, than those who live and move, than those of this mysterious author. It is from this circumstance, as we have already observed, many of his personages are supposed to be sketched from real life. He must have mixed much and variously in the society of his native country; his manners must have familiarized him to systems of manners now forgotten; and thus the persons of his drama, though in truth the creatures of his own imagination, convey the impression of individuals who, we are persuaded, must exist, or are evoked from their graves in all their original freshness, entire in their lineaments, and perfect in all the minute peculiarities of dress and demeanor."

At just about the time this was written there were rumors abroad that a brother of Scott, then in America, had avowed himself the Author of Waverley. It is to this that the following closing and smoothly-turned passage at the end of the criticism refers:

"We intended here to conclude this long article, when a strong report reached us of certain transatlantic confessions, which, if genuine, (though of this we know nothing,) assign a different author to these volumes than the party suspected by our Scottish correspondents. Yet a critic may be excused seizing upon the nearest suspicious person, on the principle happily expressed by Claverhouse, in a letter to the Earl of Linlithgow. He had been, it seems, in search of a gifted weaver who used to hold forth at Conventicles: 'I sent to seek the weaver,' they brought in his brother for him; though he may be as well-principled as he, wherefore I thought it would be no great fault to give him the trouble to go to jail with the rest.'"

BOOTS AND BROGANS.—There is a lot of prime thick and kip Boots and Brogans, stored at the second lot of 253 Pearl St. Purchasers would do well to call and examine as they must be seen. No. 253, Pearl St. N. Y. 24 story. a25 1m

THE NEW-YORK TRIBUNE

BY GREELEY & McELRATH.

VOL. II. NO. 122.

NEW-YORK, WEDNESDAY MORNING, AUGUST 31, 1842.

WHOLE NO. 434.

THE ROSE OF SHARON: A Religious Sonnet, for 1842. Edited by Miss SARAH C. EDGARTON. (No. 312) Boston: A. Tompkins and B. B. Mussey. New-York: P. P. Smith. 12 Cents.

THE FOURTH REGULAR ISSUE of this Offering is now before us, a little in advance of the usual appearance of Annuals. We rejoice to see that the number of its contributors and the value of their articles increase with each succeeding year, and to hear that it every year finds a wider and wider circle of readers. The articles in the present volume are twenty-nine in number, from the pens of Mrs. JULIA H. SCOTT, Mrs. L. J. B. CASE, Mrs. C. M. SAWYER, Mrs. S. C. EDGARTON, Rev. E. H. CHAPIN, Rev. HENRY BACON, and twelve other writers, whose names we omit as less familiar to our readers, not as less significant of excellence. There is a decided improvement in the Literary contents of this number, as compared with those of any former issue.

'The Dweller Apart,' a story by the lamented Mrs. Julia H. Scott, fitly occupies the post of honor in the 'Rose.' It is a tale of common life, but full of instruction and breathing the gentle and winning spirit of Christianity. As one of the latest efforts of its gifted and beloved author, whose memory in many hearts is so deeply and justly cherished, it will be perused with a sad and tender interest.

'The Minstrel and his Bride,' by Mrs. Caroline M. Sawyer, is the title of the next story—a sweet, romantic tale of Germany, of song and love.

'Earth and Heaven,' by Miss Louisa M. Barker, succeeds it—a delightful blending of rhapsody and allegory, dialogue and recital.

'Leonore,' by Miss S. C. Edgerton, is a story in the best style of the authoress. Its spirit and moral are as clear as the light of day.

'The Actual,' by Rev. Henry Bacon, 'Brief Lessons of a Journey,' and 'The Poet's Mission,' by Rev. E. H. Chapin, are prose essays of great excellence. To those who do not know this from the names of the writers we shall endeavor to prove it by extracts as soon as the pressure of Political matter on our columns has somewhat abated. For the present, we must conclude with a single citation from the Poems:

A PRAYER AT NIGHT.

THOSE lone, bright spheres! How beautiful their light! How wide and solemn! How far!

O'er ready solitudes and bold Norwegian heights, And tropic deserts, will one small, faint star

His cheering radiance throw!

And they who toil below—

The weary voyager on the trackless sea—

The pilgrim thrown beneath the wayside tree,

O'erworn with care and pain;

O! shall not these take heart of grace again,

And struggle on through all the awful night?

Cheered by that soft, sweet light?

Grant me, O God! a high, soft star to be!

Calm, still and bright, to trace my way in heaven,

And shed my light o'er life's tempestuous sea.

Where human hearts, like fragile barks, are driven

Mid rocks and hidden shoals.

A small, pure star, within the glittering band

That high above the clouds, undimmed and grand,

In placid beauty rolls,

To herald on the weary to the land

Where all is rest and peace; to guide the way

To heaven's unclouded day. S. C. E.
